Contemporary extended families are living in an unprecedented age of connecting technology. Previous studies on family connecting technology (FCT) indicated the presence of someone who could be considered as a "kinkeeper" who keeps family members informed about one another. However, there has been limited research in HCI to date on who kinkeepers are and how this role is technologically enacted in a family digital environment. In this paper, we present a study on digital kinkeeping by the kinkeepers through WhatsApp as a representative example of contemporary FCTs in mediating familial bonding.
