The Trinity or, its earli In his 1995 work The Trivialization of God: The Dangerous Illusion of a Manageable Deity, Mc-Cullough explores the differences between modern, humanistic interpretations of God and the unpredictable God that is portrayed in the Bible. McCullough points to Western society's emphasis on individualism and control of one's surroundings, as well as the "silence of God" in the face of modern genocides, as the reasons behind this "domestication" of God, and suggests that believers seek repentance and the Word of God to create a true, not a self-centered, faith. This public revelation of a private sin one he had already repented and for which he had sought forgiveness forced McCullough to re-evaluate his life and the place of his faith in it.
