Page iv. Crudely summarised, the approaches of both the American mass communication tradition and McLuhan's work in the 1960s derive from a position broadly supportive of the directions in which Western society was moving, whereas those of the Frankfurt School and the English culturalist tradition are profoundly critical. The present trend in approaches to media texts can be characterized by turning away from –text-internal readings, where readers are theorized as decoders of fixed meanings, to more dynamic models, where meanings are negotiated by actively participating readers" (Meinhof, 1994, p. 212). It would be beyond the scope of this contribution to discuss the different strands that have led to a more dynamic view of the text. As Fries notes, the reader begins to read the text with the headline .Thus, after reading a headline such as â€œHouse prices upÂ», he has some expectation of what the following lines will be about, and he will do everything possible to connect these lines to the headline(1987,61). Headlines are something different from the rest of newspaper language.
