Higher education is available today to more young people in Latin American and the Caribbean (LAC) than at any other time in the region's history. And while this increased access is a positive development, it does not guarantee the quality education countries need to capitalize on this momentum. Countries need to help students reach their potential by the creation of high-quality, diverse programs that equip them for success in the labor market. Our pursuit of growth and prosperity and the economic future of the region depends on it.
