Scientism is the promotion of science as the best or only objective means by which society should determine normative and epistemological values. The term scientism is generally used critically, implying an unwarranted application of science in situations considered not amenable to application of the scientific method or similar scientific standards. In the philosophy of science, the term scientism frequently implies a critique of the more extreme expressions of logical positivism and has been used by Book Publishing WeChat. I argue that identifying the person with the brain is scientism (not science), that the brain is not the person, and that it is the person who learns. In fact the brain only responds to the learning of embodied experience within the extra-neural network of intersubjective communications. The first part of the book discusses the emergence of scientific humanism among thinkers such as Bacon, Comenius, and the Puritan reformers, and goes on to detail its subsequent connection with the religious reformation proposed by positivists such as Saint-Simon, Comte, and Renan. Scientism in this sense is nowhere better manifested than in the recent book, Consilience, by a noted scientist, Professor E.O. Wilson. The subtitle of this book is "The Unity of Knowledge," but what it defends is really the uniformity of knowledge. Professor Wilson identifies real knowledge with scientific knowledge; and he apparently thinks that the work of philosophy is to make surmises about what is as yet unknown but will presumably come to be known as science continues to advance.
