1 The ofcer takes his hand away from his revolver. Why do you think his hand was on the revolver? 2 When Ralph says â€˜Hulloâ€™, he answers an unspoken question. What do you think is the question? 3 The ofcer says â€˜Fun and gamesâ€™ and then he smiles. What does he think is happening? 4 Does the ofcer believe it when Ralph says two boys were killed? How do you know? Â c A student has written a reply to the competition advert. Read the email and answer the questions. 1 Who is Paul Scott? 2 Why is he being nominated? 3 What charity will the money go to and why? This time last year I was sitting in my small London hotel room wondering if I would ever be able to adapt to my new home. I had come to the UK from Poland to start a new life. Paul's letters are intensely human documents. In the examination of such basic human questions as What did he write the letters with?" "Did he use a secretary to record them?" and "What was his personal writing style?" much real information can be gathered regarding his thought without intimidating the average reader. Â At the same time, they draw attention to his mood while writing and his relationship with the recipients. Father Murphy-O'Connor also investigates the question of how these letters, written to widely scattered churches, were brought together to form the Pauline canon.
