The puzzles start gentle on Mondays and get increasingly tougher as the week goes on, so if you're a novice, start with a Monday puzzle and work your way up to a later-week puzzle. (You can buy books of puzzles from certain days of the week; here's a book of all-Mondays.) 2. Figure out the annoying (but sometimes clever!) gimmick. There are certain words the New York Times LOVES, words that are often found in crossword puzzles but rarely in everyday conversation. These can include words like "iota," above, which is common in speech but that the puzzle uses over and over. It can also include weirder words, ones that have a lot of consonants or vowels.
