Philosophy is the oldest discipline, engaged in the study of almost all aspects of life. It, like any other science, has its own special characteristics. Let's try to consider the main ones. The specificity of philosophical knowledge lies in the complexity of its structure. This discipline includes many sciences, in particular, logic, ontology, and so on. Philosophy has a theoretical, most general character. This discipline contains the basic principles and ideas that underlie other sciences. In most cases, philosophical works are rather subjective, that is, they can reflect the world out of philosophical concepts.
