BookTelevision is a Canadian English language specialty channel owned by Bell Media. It was originally established as a network that would broadcast programming relating to books, literature, and various media. By the 2010s, it had shifted primarily to airing Bell Media library programming. In November 2000, Learning and Skills Television of Alberta, a company majority owned by CHUM Limited (60%), was awarded a category 1 television broadcasting licence by the Canadian Radio-television and Practical Television, later known as Television and subsequently Television & Consumer Electronics, was a UK magazine for the electronics/TV servicing trade, enthusiasts, and the general public. There's a perception that books are good, while TV is bad. Spend a day curled up with a book and you're an intellectual, but spend a day watching your favorite show and you become a couch potato. It increases your knowledge and makes you think. Watching television on the other hand kills off brain cells. But why is that? Why can't watching TV be just as educational as reading a book? For example, does watching the show Game of Thrones lower your intelligence, while reading the books does the exact opposite?
