The Discursive Construction of History Remembering the Wehrmacht's War of Annihilation

Hannes Heer, Walter Manoschek, Alexander Pollak, Ruth Wodak

HANNES HEER works in Hamburg, Germany as a historian, writer and exhibition producer. From 1993 to 2000 he worked at the Hamburg Institute for Social Research, directing the first Wehrmacht Exhibition. He has written numerous publications on National Socialism, the Wehrmacht and post-war recollection.

WALTER MANOSCHEK is Professor of Political Science and chairs the Department for Government at the University of Vienna, Austria. His research and publications focus on politics of the past, the political system of National Socialism, and Holocaust Studies.

ALEXANDER POLLAK is Research Manager at the European Union Agency for Fundamental Rights (FRA) and an external lecturer in the Department of Government at the University of Vienna, Austria. He has written extensively on the politics of memory, racism, anti-Semitism and Critical Discourse Analysis.

RUTH WODAK is Distinguished Professor of Discourse Studies, Lancaster University, UK, and was previously Professor of Applied Linguistics at the University of Vienna. In 2008–9, she will hold the Kerstin Hesselgren Chair of the Swedish Parliament. She is co-editor of the Journal of Language and Politics and Critical Discourse Studies and has published many books in the field of Critical Discourse Analysis. Her research deals extensively with racism and anti-Semitism in post-war Europe, particularly Austria

How do democratic and pluralistic societies cope with traumatic events in their past? What strategies and taboos are employed in reconstructing wars, revolutions, torturing, mass killings and genocide in a way that makes their contradiction of basic human rights and values invisible? The process of reconstructing history takes place in different domains of life and in a range of genres. Narratives are frequently reproduced through political speeches, films, documentaries and schoolbooks. Moreover, they are also transmitted in the private spheres of families and across generations. This interdisciplinary volume analyzes in detail, for the first time, the history and image of the German Wehrmacht and the debates in Austria and Germany surrounding two exhibitions about Wehrmacht war crimes during World War II – exhibitions which have to be regarded as a major intervention in the construction of national historical narratives and 'myths', and which provoked widespread political and media reaction, ranging from the scandalized to the critically reflective.

Reviews:

'Ruth Wodak and her interdisciplinary team shed light on the Wehrmacht crimes during WWII as well as their subsequent reception and representation. The volume gives an excellent overview of this important part of the history and aftermath of the Holocaust. Its specific layout and structure can also serve as a paradigm for comparable studies.' - Dirk Rupnow, Forum: Qualitative Social Research

...the questions of collective memory and public discourse raised in these empirical studies are...of the highest importance...This book, rich in detail and ethical clarity, deserves a wide readership.' - John D.H. Downing, Southern Illinois University, Discourse and Society

'...an accomplished collection of articles written on a high level with findings of scholarly interest.' - Jewish Political Studies Review

'The book under review is welcome as a contribution to the history of the exhibition in particular and thus of German "memory politics" in general, as well as to discourse analysis and historical society. It is a wide-ranging and thought-provoking volume.' - Journal of Genocide Research

The history of construction overlaps many other fields like structural engineering and relies on other branches of science like archaeology, history and architecture to investigate how the builders lived and recorded their accomplishments. Those fields allow us to analyse constructed buildings and other structures built since prehistory, the tools used and the different uses of building materials. How do we construct national identities in discourse? Which topics, which discursive strategies and which linguistic devices are employed to construct national... Thus, the rhetorical promotion of national identification and the discursive construction and reproduction of national difference on public, semi-public and semi-private levels within a nation state are analysed in much detail and illustrated with a huge amount of examples taken from many genres (speeches, focus-groups, interviews, media, and so forth). In addition to the critical discourse analysis of multiple genres accompanying various commemorative and celebratory events in 1995, this extended and revised edition is able to draw comparisons with similar events in 2005. The study aims at analyzing the discursive construction of nations, nationalities and peoples' day commemoration in Ethiopia.
