This social trend towards diversity contradicts the established discourse often articulated in the media promoting moral panics about the family. French philosopher Michael Foucault wrote about the power of discourses. Discourses construct the way we discuss the social world, consequently discourses construct the way we understand the social world around us. Organizational diversity which is due to different patterns of work outside and inside the home, and to changing marital trends. This category includes "reconstituted families" as a result of divorce and remarriage, and dualcareer families, some of which have resulted in a greater democratisation of domestic labour. Assigned at over 300 schools, The Family was an instant success due to Philip Cohen's conversational style and robust scholarship. By encouraging sociological thinking about contemporary families, The Family helps students become savvy consumers of media-reported research. In the Second Edition, Cohen examines trends in family life such as gender fluidity, sexuality in later life, and technology's transformation of romantic relationships.
