Texas Lighthouse Trail Scenic Drive. This drive is for some lighthouse fans. Start at Sabine Pass Lighthouse and along the way to Port Aransas visit Sabine Pass Battleground State Historic Site , McFaddin National Wildlife Refuge, the 1852 Bolivar Point Light Station, the Half Moon Reef Lighthouse, and the 1855 Lydia Ann Lighthouse.Â This scenic Texas Drive gives you an "out of Texas feel" with some stunning vistas, massive geological upheavals, lush valleys, stark canyon ridges, and several signs warning "Watch for Rocks," "Steep Grades," and "Sharp Curves." This route defines the Texas Hill Country. This drive is especially gorgeous during the spring and summer when vibrant wildflowers line the entire stretch of the road. To get to it from Fredericksburg, go north on State Route 16 until you reach Willow City, and then head east on Ranch Road 1323 before turning left on Willow City Loop. 2. Highway 90/385.Â There absolutely are scenic back roads in Texas! We have mountains, desert, and lush forests with roads winding through them. It almost seems that youâ€™ll be treated to beautiful landscapes no matter where you go! The scenic drive offers a very different view of this part of the United States. It also provides a glimpse of the far-reaching lands of neighboring Mexico. And if you happen to have an adventurous spirit, then exploring the city of Presidio is a must. This is especially true for those who believe in UFOs or the existence of a super-secret military base.Â Driving along this scenic route in the central region of Texas is like passing through the walkways of a well-manicured garden. On both sides of the road are bluebonnets that give this 39-mile scenic drive a certain charm that no other routes can offer. The thing about the Enchanted Rock scenic drive is that, with or without these blooms, the route is still beautiful.
